Vapor Rush: Getting High Without Being Detected

Vapor rush is a new product that promotes “getting high without being detected” from vaporized marijuana, and is based on the new electronic vaporizer technology as seen with e-cigarettes.

THE FACTS

- Vapor Rush delivers a dose of THC from vaporized marijuana called “kief”
- It can expose and affect unknowing bystanders, such as children and the elderly and those with a variety of medical problems
- Dangers include the ability to smoke in the workplace, airplanes and other public places due to the fact that it cannot be detected
- The company (based in southern California) which manufactures Vapor Rush provides 3 varieties which are derived from potent sativa and indica strains of cannabis
- According to the FDA, it is untested and potentially dangerous as with e-cigarettes
